

Smithfield Market and his friends, but the others—and they are very numerous—were as generously given and as gladly received.

Smell is probably the most powerful stirrer of memory, and in years to come the smell of boiling jam, perhaps damson most of all, will bring back to many the High School cookery kitchen, with a row of steaming brass pans, groups of busy girls, the buzz of industry and tongues, and, I hope, the recollection of happiness.

D. F. LUNN.

---